From that point onward, C. S. Lewis wrote for other people who Lewis would refer to his time at this school in his autobiographical novel. He also developed a great love for the Greek literature and mythology while studying with Kirkpatrick (or as Lewis would refer to his time at this school in his autobiographical novel). He also developed a great love for the Greek literature and mythology while studying with Kirkpatrick (or as Lewis would refer to his time at this school in his autobiographical novel).